

Problem Statement:

Navigating campus would be easier if there were maps for the buildings.

Details:

Many students and personnel at USC have a hard time navigating between many of the buildings on campus, especially those such as new or incoming professors, freshmen starting classes for the first time, taking classes in many different buildings, or people trying to find the offices for various people and departments scattered across campus.

While it's decently easy to find the building one needs to be at, especially with USC's official campus map, as well as building names being integrated in popular map and navigation apps, there is a lack of maps of the insides of buildings, only being in the most popular buildings on campus, and sometimes being tucked away, such as the one tucked away by the stairs close to the bookstore in Russell House.

Therefore, I propose a website with a collection of maps of every building on campus, such as the libraries, classroom buildings, research labs, and the first floor of significant dorms, such as Honors Residence, Capstone, Maxcy, and some of Campus Village.
